Alice Springs POH 2011

It is exceptionally hard to put the POH Alice Springs into words.

There is the initial reluctance that this (POH) is some religious experience where "god" will be thrown at me every 10 seconds. Yes it was organized by a religious group but POH is a very sensitive organization and does not push this in any way and Brother James or BJ adds a laugh with his quiet leadership that is very warm and engaging but never highly organized (this is actually a great trait).

The main attraction is to spend 10 days in nonstop contact with you son away from the electronic clutter and to be able to just talk and experience being "in the moment".

Start to understand the aboriginal culture just a little bit and appreciate their way of life as you would never see it.

To sit in a class of children smiling from ear to ear as they crawl over your son as he reads them a story and you start to immerse yourself within the school or watch kick to kick and you soon see who the true sportsmen are.

Appreciate and understand the commitment, effort and endeavor of those who you meet in your travels.

Really experiencing sites such as Uluru with the knowledge and understanding gained from the aboriginal culture. Yet in our year we cancelled a sightseeing trip to stay at the school and spend more time with the kids as that was much more fun and rewarding.

Then there is the surprise of the fathers and sons who you meet and how the interaction with you son increases not only in time spent together but also in quality and then you truly appreciate the ability to being "in the moment".

This is an experience that is like no other and for those who take the perceived risk your returns will be in truck loads.
